- 3. Almost all new inductees from the Mukachevo area were sent to distant military districts. The only exceptions to this policy were the members of local sport teams. They had to apply, through their athletic organizations several months prior to induction, for special permission to remain in the region while on active duty. Very few of the athletes chose to apply for such permission because it involved too much red tape. Those to whom permission was granted served within the region and were released on pass when their respective teams played an official game.
- 4. Deferments were difficult to obtain. At least 30 per cent disability was required to assure rejection or deferment for medical reasons.

 Eventually all fit men of draft age were inducted because deferments were never granted for more than a year or so. Except for men rejected permanently for medical reasons and evaders age men were sure to be inducted.
